“Prior to Stratex our plan was managed utilizing spreadsheets, datasheets, word documents, etc. With Stratex we have streamlined the process from our 5-year SWOT and goal setting to short term action items. Plan time management has been cut up to 75%, especially during the initial planning stages and ongoing annual planning. I can’t imagine having to manage our plan again without Stratex!”

Tina Kirsch – Corporate Performance Officer
Midwest Transplant Networks

“We are very excited to continue to implement Stratex. We used the Stratex framework already to develop the City’s most recent update to the five-year Citywide Business Plan. Stratex will provide further accountability to delivery of city programs and goals as adopted by the City Council. We will also begin using Stratex as a framework for the KCStat meetings with the Mayor and the City Manager. Kansas City is already regarded as a municipal leader in strategic planning and performance management. Stratex will provide that next tool in the box to further enhance what is already a national model.”

Scott M. Huizenga – Budget Officer
City of Kansas City, Missouri

Organizational Performance embarks on the organization's performance vision. A way to look at organizational performance is by grouping different factors into three categories: the external environment of the organization, the internal environment of the organization, and the organizational outcomes. One of the most important things is that all these three factors are highly interdependent and interactive with each other.
